Historical data shows that the stock market works well when democrats are in control. (Bloomberg) - With Joe Biden canceling the Keystone XL oil pipeline hours after he became president Wednesday, killing again a cross-border project that won a four-year rep without his Republican predecessor, Donald Trump.In in one of the first major environmental measures, Biden will revoke TC Energy Corp.'s pipeline authorization through his executive order because it does not serve the U.S. national interest in the transition team, according to a briefing. The move puts Keystone's fate in full circle, repeating the decision made in 2015 by President Barack Obama to keep the pipeline from crossing the border. Trump reversed that in 2017, his fourth full day in office, due to protests from environmental groups. TC Energy said it was disappointed and would suspend work on the project, leading to the layoff of thousands of workers. The decision overturns an unprecedented, comprehensive regulatory process that has lasted more than a decade and has repeatedly concluded the pipeline would transport much-needed energy in an environmentally conscious manner, said the Calgary-based company. TC Energy shares pared after losses initially trading at $56, down 1% on the news. Environmentalists expect the latest rejection - more than a dozen years since the pipeline's first proposal - to last. They argue the project would give outlets heavy Canadian oil sands crude extracted from Alberta via particularly energy-intensive processes that ratchet up the carbon and the Location stop to dirty and dangerous Keystone XL tar sands pipeline immediately and once and for all would be an important first step and testament to the leadership of the various grassroots movement that has long pushed to stop it and other harmful pipelines, said Tiernan Sittenfeld , a senior vice president with the environmental group League of Preservation Voters.Biden promised the action on the campaign trail, but the official move still provoked outrage from oil industry leaders, some Canadian interests and the unions that support the project. The Biden administration has decided to listen to the voices of fringe activists instead of union members and American consumers on Day 1, said the United Union of Union Plumbers and Pipefitters in an emailed statement based on news reports ahead of the measure. Construction of Keystone XL began last year, jumping began with a $1.1 billion investment in the province of Alberta. Entire segments of the line, including segments crossing the U.S.-Canada border, have already been built. TC Energy worked to make the project more palatable to the Democratic administration, inking labor agreements with four major pipeline unions last August, agreeing to sell its equity stake to the line of indigenous communities along the route and promising to power it fully with renewable energy. Still, Keystone XL has been lightning rod lightning rod and the lacmus test for environmental awareness almost since it was first proposed in 2005. The 1,179-mile (1,897-km) segment is designed to move oil from Alberta through Montana, South Dakota and Nebraska and then connect the existing network of feeding crude to the Gulf Coast. The line would carry 830,000 barrels of oil a day. Opponents argue that it will stimulate the development of oil snow, contributing to climate change. Years ago, proponents of the controversial crude pipeline argued that more of Canada's cheaper, heavy crude would help fuel producers on the U.S. Gulf Coast depopulate supplies to countries like Venezuela or conflict-prone K ozel-Keleten.De refineries in Texas and Louisiana becoming more flexible, using more of the abundant light oil from shale fields. Plus, Canadian crude oil's price advantage has declined, and imports from the country have roughly doubled in a decade with a steady flow of more than 3.5 million barrels per day, without Keystone XL. This is not an issue for refineries, said Robert Campbell, head of oil products research at Energy Aspects Ltd. They can switch to domestic light. The pain is being smitten with oil-shed producers. Alberta Premier Jason Kenney on Tuesday urged Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau to take steps to save the permit, saying that withdrawing it would cause damage to the Canada-U.S. bilateral relationship. Keystone XL was one of a handful of energy and mining projects Biden took specifically against while on the campaign trail. Environmentalists emboldened by his move to Keystone have been pressuring him to revoke a critical permit allowing the continued operation of Energy Transfer LP's Dakota Access oil pipeline and to take action against Enbridge Inc.'s plan to replace and expand the aging Line 3 pipeline from Alberta to Superior, Wisconsin.From the archives -- Why the Keystone project is controversial: QuickTake It's exciting news said Dallas Goldtooth, the organizer of the Indigenous Environmental Network. Now what are you going to do with line 3 and the Dakota Access pipeline? We're happy, but we'd like to see what comes next. (Updates on the TC Energy reaction and shares in the fourth paragraph.) U.S.-listed shares in BlackBerry Ltd. rose 4.4% toward a nearly three-year high in afternoon trading on Wednesday to extend a record rally over the past few days. The Canada-based cyber-security software company's store was on a tearing over the past week, after The Global and Mail reported that the company, which made BlackBerry cellphones in a past life, sold 90 patents to China-based technology giant Huawei, and after the company reportedly settled a patent violation lawsuit against Facebook Inc. . The stock, which closed at its highest price since March 2018, rose 73.3% amid a four-day winning streak. This would be the best four-day performance for the stock since it began trading in February 1999, according to a MarketWatch analysis of FactSet data. The current record four-day rally is 65.7%, down from the four sessions ended June 2, 2000. The stock has now rocketed 153.7% in the past three months, while the ETFMG Prime Cyber Security ETF has climbed 26.0% and S&Amp;T; P 500 gained 12.0%. On Wednesday, shares in clinical stage biopharmaceutic company Caladrius Biosciences (CLBS) took down a whopping 110%. However, the surge did not come off the back of the treatment's official approval or the release of positive clinical trial results. Seemingly more prosaic, investors seemed to cheer up the news that the company had treated the first patient in the Phase 2b FREEDOM Trial clbs16, a small biotech candidate to treat coronary microvascular dysfunction (CMD). The double-blind, placebo-controlled study was launched by the Christ Hospital Health Network in Cincinnati, Ohio, and overall, by the end of the year, 105 patients are expected to enroll at multiple locations in the U.S. The purpose of the study is to further evaluate the effectiveness and safety of intracoronaria delivery autologous CD34+ cells in patients with CMD and without obstructive coronary artery disease. The company expects top-level data of 3Q22 to be available. Covering the herd H.C. Wainwright, analyst Joseph Pantignis commented: In the LEAVE trial, CLBS16 is ready to replicate the performance of a larger population of CMD patients bilvly, therefore consolidating based on key discussions with the FDA around its path Excitement excitement Initiating the study may be down to a treatment with a good track track history already. The analyst reminds investors that in spring 2020, the company reported that CLBS16 is the 2a of safety and efficacy. The data showed that in 19 out of 20 CMD patients, single use of CLBS16 significantly improved coronary artery flow reserve (CFR) and angina symptoms. Pantignis highlights how CLBS16 may prove unique compared to other CMD treatments. We note that based on CLBS16 MoA (mechanism of action), the benefits experienced by patients come from revascularization, so they are expected to be durable and contribute to restoring the image of heart tissue in the long term, said the 5-star analyst. This element is a key distinguishing factor for CLBS16 from current treatments, and together with a significant improvement in symptoms, it should resonate well with doctors and regulators. If you think you might have missed the ship following Wednesday's massive share haul, Pantignis thinks otherwise. Even after the surge, Pantignis' price target stands at $14, which, with an additional upside of ~306%, could be played in the coming months. Not surprisingly, the analyst insists on a Buy rating.
